

PARENTS PROVIDE CHILDREN DECIDE

Parents and children have their own jobs when it comes to eating. Parents decide what, when and where to eat. Children decide how much to eat or whether to eat at all.

Parents provide: What to eat

Serve a variety of foods. Set a good example by eating a variety of foods yourself.

Offer new foods with old favorites. If a new food is refused, don't be concerned. Young children may need to try a new food 10 to 15 times before they decide whether or not they like it.

Prepare the same foods for everyone in your family. You can respect your child's food likes and dislikes without having to cook something different for them.

Parents provide: When to eat

Serve regular meals and snacks. Young children need to eat every two to three hours. Try to have meals and snacks at about the same time every day.

Serve milk at meals and snacks. Offer water when your child is thirsty between meals. Your child will eat better if you serve milk and juice for meals and snacks instead of letting them drink all day long.

Let your child eat only at meal and snack times. Young children should not help themselves to food and drink from the cupboard or refrigerator. This interferes with their appetite at mealtimes and is not good for their teeth.

Parents provide: Where to eat

Have your child sit with the family for meals and snacks. This helps them focus on eating. Young children enjoy feeding themselves, so expect them to eat with their hands and to make a mess.

Make mealtime a family time. Sit down and eat with your child. Turn off the TV, put away your phone and enjoy talking with your family. Mealtimes should be pleasant for everyone.

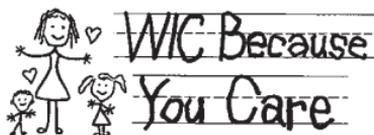

Children decide: How much to eat

Let your child choose from the foods offered. Your job is done when you select and prepare the food. Relax if they eat only a few of the foods served. If your child is growing well and full of energy, don't worry about how much they are eating.

Expect your child's appetite to vary from day to day. Some days your child may not eat at all or eat only a bite or two of a few foods. On other days, they will eat everything served. Trust your child to eat. Continue offering a variety of foods and they will eat when hungry.

Remember, let your child eat what and how much they want from what you provide for them.
